The centers for the prevention and control of the United States diseases estimate that 1 out of 88 children born today will be diagnosed with the autism spectrum disorder (ASD). The distinctive seasons of the neurocal development condition include persistent diletto in social communication and repetitive or restrictive models of among the interiors that appear in early childhood and daily operation of the damage. A study conducted in California, USA, has established that an intense early intervention therapy is effective in improving the perception and linguistic qualities among children with autism for 18 months. In addition, it normalizes its brain activity and improves its social skills. Denver-Model-ESDM), showed greater brain activation when they saw faces instead of objects, an answer that was a child of children without autism in the study, but contrary to children with autism who received a different intervention (2012)The Denver model is a world of intervention developed in 2000 by Sally Rogers and Geraldine Dawson. Therapy combines all intensive teaching of anism applied to behavior with development approaches "based on the relationship. With autism between 18 and 30 months, in Sacramento, California and Seattle, as well as children" control ". The proportion between participating men and women was more than 3-A-1, the autism is five times more common among children who among the children.
